Intelligence Activity

Borkowski reportedly served as an officer with the Polish Army in Russia.

In 1958 several associates of Borkowski who knew him in both Argentina and the United States reported that he had served as a "politruk" (political officer) or UB (Polish Security Police) officer when sailing aboard the Polish vessels "Kilinski" and "Batory" during the late 1940's.

Borkowski was reportedly employed at the UB office in Gdynia, Poland, before going to Argentina, and was regarded with suspicion by members of the Polish emigre colony in Buenos Aires, who believed he was gathering information concerning them on behalf of the Polish or Russian governments.

When interviewed in 1958, Borkowski denied having served as an officer with the Polish Army in Russia or having served as a "politruk" and denied ever having taken part in intelligence activities although admitting that he may have made statements to that effect while intoxicated. No evidence was developed of his participation in communist or intelligence activity while in the United States.
